Japanese Maps
of the Greater East Asia War
1930s - 1940s

Asia Bookroom
How the Japanese authorities viewed the Asia Pacific region in the years prior to the Second World War, and indeed during the war itself, can be better appreciated by studying Japanese maps of the 1930s and 1940s. These maps, many of which show resources, comparative military strength as well as the infrastructure of the regions shown, speak of colonial ambition. The fact that so many of these maps were not top secret, but published by the Japanese mainstream media for distribution to an interested Japanese public, strikes the western viewer when first coming into contact with these maps. How aware were the American and European powers at the time? There is no straight forward answer to this of course however even today these maps are surprisingly poorly represented in collections outside Japan.

In this catalogue Asia Bookroom offers a collection of Japanese maps of Asia, the Pacific, Australia and the world from this critical time in world history. The majority of these maps are rarely seen outside Japan and a number are held by few institutions even within Japan.

Please visit our website www.AsiaBookroom.com for larger and in some cases more images.

This striking large coloured birds-eye view of the city of Shinkyo, the Chinese city known today as Changchun, was published in this pamphlet which explains the first "five-year" stage of the project for the planning of Shinkyo. Shinkyo was established by the Japanese in the first part of the 20th century, the area having been chosen for its strategic importance. It became a city in 1932. The Emperor Puyi lived there until the end of World War II.

This attractive birds-eye view of the planned city shows Shinkyo's broad streets, trees and attractive buildings. The planning of Shikyo was influenced by the changes that had been made to 19th century Paris, by contemporary American town planning and the Garden City Movement. Today Changchun is a city of over 7 million people, the capital of China's Jilin Province and known for its car manufacturing.

On the reverse of the map, two panels upper right section showing a photograph titled 国都新京建設の全貌 [Kokuto kensetsu no zenbō] accompanying an overview of the planning of Shinkyo and the purpose of the city. Two panels in the upper middle section on reverse of the birds-eye view show a coloured plan of the future Shinkyo. It shows the city located within the nearby region and indicates government, residential, and industrial areas, the race course, airport, railway lines, parks etc. A comprehensive list of names of parks, avenues, plazas and roads is also provided along with the map. The other eight panels are a report of plans for the city, covering information on the development of infrastructure, constructions and highlights in the first five-year project, financing for the construction and more.

It is clear from the text and the images that this brochure was published to commend Shinkyo to readers as a city with a bright future - a city of economic and cultural importance - with the intention of attracting industry and people.
